The current jobs market appears swamped with an inexhaustable supply of cyber openings. Cyber security startups are also on the rise and filling their boots with smart and skilled cyber investigators.

I often get involved in work where a cyber team is uncomfortable assisting a client who is seeking compensation through the court process. There appears to be a skills gap in the market in being able to assist clients who seek legal relief or are involved in legal disputes related to cyber crime.

This presentation provides a general overview of drafting and submitting expert digital investigation reports and includes tips on giving evidence and working with instructing counsel.
